Literacy Design Collaborative Selects Lead & Learn Fellows to Present at Southern Regional Education Board Conference

LDC ambassadors to present at the fourth annual College- and Career-Readiness Standards Networking Conference

New York, NY – July 8, 2016 – The Literacy Design Collaborative (LDC) is honored to introduce the 2016 LDC Lead & Learn Fellows, who will serve as LDC ambassadors at the SREB College- and Career-Readiness Standards Networking Conference in Louisville, KY, next month. Fellowship teams will present LDC sessions to share their practice, enhance learning for others, engage in social media, and continue the conversation after the conference with posts on the LDC blog. Sessions will cover topics such as student engagement, project-based learning, instructional scaffolding, teacher collaboration, and much more. The LDC Lead & Learn Fellows will also be sharing their classroom implementation techniques and their takeaways. Teachers participating in the federally-funded i3 innovation grant will also be presenting and sharing their experiences from the first year of LDC implementation.

LDC commends these leaders in our community of practice for their willingness to share their time and expertise to help other educators and their students succeed. Fellowship teams that applied for and were accepted for this year's program have been awarded a stipend to defray the costs of travel, lodging, and conference registration.

About the Literacy Design Collaborative

The Literacy Design Collaborative (LDC) is a national network of partners and 75,000+ teachers committed to changing the way students experience reading and writing in school. LDC offers free teacher-created vetted tasks, lessons, and modules that help teachers effectively teach reading, writing, speaking, and listening in all subjects. LDC also offers online and blended professional development, progress monitoring, and collaborative work spaces for teachers and coaches. www.LDC.org
